SAILOR KILLED AS HE SPEEDS TO SIDE OF DYING WIFE

Motorcycle Crashes Into Side of Truck on Lincoln Highway

SKULL IS BROKEN

Officer Says Victim Passed Him at 70-Mile Clip

While on a 48-hour leave of absence from the Philadelphia Navy Yard, A. S. Adams, 22 years old, first class fireman attached to the U. S. Destroyer 9-1, was killed instantly last night when the motorcycle on which he was speeding to his wife, who is ill at New London, Conn., figured in a crash with a truck on the Lincoln Highway, near the Philadelphia city line.

Hurled 15 feet into a ditch on the side of the highway, the motorcycle falling on top of him, Adams sustained a compound fracture of the skull. He was dead when picked up by the driver of the truck, Michael Facchiano, 24 years old, of 1151 Main street, Manayunk.

Arraigned before Justice of the Peace Joseph A. Keating, at South Langhorne, following his arrest by State Highway Patrolman Hohlefelder on a technical charge of involuntary manslaughter, Facchiano was held under bail of $2,000 pending a further hearing.

Park Guard Reupert, stationed on the Roosevelt Boulevard, informed South Langhorne State Highway authorities that Adams sped past Byberry Road and boulevard at a 70-mile clip at 7.15 p. m., less than five minutes before the fatality occurred.

A receipt for a telegram which Adams had sent to his wife late yesterday afternoon informing her that he would soon be at her bedside, was discovered in one of the victim's pockets when the body was removed to the Byberry Emergency Hospital by State Police. Communicating with Navy Yard officials, police learned that Adams had borrowed a motorcycle belonging to Arthur Hickey, also a fireman on the destroyer, after obtaining a leave to join his wife.

The accident occurred as Adams, after crossing city line into Bucks County, attempted to pass an automobile. He struck the side of Facchiano's truck, coming in the opposite direction. As he was lifted bodily from the motorcycle, his head struck the truck and he was tossed into the ditch, the cycle toppling on him.

Police say they were unable to find a driver's license among Adams' possessions.

DANGER LURKS IN SPRING DAYS, ADVISES STATE

HARRISBURG, March 7. — Dr. J. Bruce McCreary, deputy secretary of health, today issued a warning on so-called "pet" days. He pointed out that at this particular season of the year with the different marked ranges in temperature many persons are likely to become over-enthusiastic when the temperature rises and by disregarding the necessity of being sufficiently protected so far as clothing is concerned, thereby open themselves to colds, grippe and other diseases which frequently follow such conduct.

"Many persons each year become exceedingly enthusiastic concerning the brightness and the warmth of some of the days that at this particular season of the year inject themselves into the average cool or cold weather," Dr. McCreary said. "Unthinkingly, under the false impression that spring has come, many men and women upon the first indication of more than average warmth will doff protective apparel to such an extent that they invite disease.

"While of course it is possible to become over-fond of the fur coat and the heavy winter overcoat, there is on the other hand a golden mean which should not be disregarded. The mere

TWO FIRES DAMAGE BARN AND RESIDENCE

Barn Near Morrisville and House at Trevoze Are Scenes of Blazes

TOTAL LOSS IS $7,000.00

Fire damaged two structures in the lower part of Bucks county yesterday, loss on the two being estimated at nearly $7,000.

At 6.45 last evening a large barn on the property of William H. Moon, who conducts a nursery on River Road between Morrisville and Yardley, was found ablaze.

The barn and contents, valued at $6,000, were destroyed. The origin of the fire is undetermined.

Fire companies, called from Yardley and Morrisville, laid 2,000 feet of hose, pumping water from the hydrants, and were enabled to save nearby buildings.

The fire occurred at about 3 o'clock during the afternoon in a house, the home of George Ryan, Trevoze. This building was damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars.

The blaze at the Ryan place originated on the second floor, but the cause of this is also unknown.

A high wind endangered homes nearby, but with assistance of fire companies from Trevoze, Southampton, Richboro, South Langhorne and Langhorne, the blaze was confined to a portion of the Ryan home.

FOURTEEN SCHOOLS TO HAVE PART IN "ENGINEERS DAY"

Will Be Guests at University of Pennsylvania on March 14th

BRISTOL AMONG THEM

Will Inspect Towne Scientific School and Several Others

Fourteen schools in Bucks county are included in a selected group of secondary schools whose students have been invited to attend the second annual "Engineers Day" at the University of Pennsylvania on Saturday, March 14, as the guests of the faculty and undergraduates of the University's engineering schools.

As part of the "Engineers Day" program the visitors will be given the opportunity to inspect the Towne Scientific School, the Moore School of Electrical Engineering and the Harrison Laboratory of Chemistry on the Pennsylvania campus and to attend a series of demonstrations, experiments and tests to be conducted by graduate and undergraduate students in engineering.

In addition, talking motion pictures featuring the development of important projects in various fields of engineering will be shown every hour and there will be special exhibitions of student work in engineering. The day's program will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning and continue until 4 o'clock in the afternoon.

According to Dr. Robert H. Fernald, Dean of the Towne Scientific School, the "Engineers Day" program is designed particularly to give prospective engineering students an early opportunity to acquaint themselves with the requirements which must be met before they can be admitted to engineering courses.

"Regardless of his ability the average man who enters an engineering school faces at least a temporary handicap if he has failed during his preliminary education to take various courses which not only serve to equip him for his engineering study at college but also measure to some extent his ability to master technical subjects," Dean Fernald pointed out.

"Many students give little thought to their life work until they have nearly completed their college courses, but there are many others who, even while they are in high school or preparatory school, reach a definite decision in the matter and are anxious to take advantage of every opportunity to further their interests.

"By visiting an engineering school and by becoming acquainted with its requirements for admission a secondary school student who believes he would like to study engineering at a college or university can early acquire a fairly comprehensive idea of what will be required of him after he matriculates.

"If his visit serves to increase the prospective student's desire to take an engineering course then he can shape his secondary school work accordingly, and eventually he can enter an engineering school far better prepared to cope with its requirements than he might have been otherwise.

"On the other hand, if the secondary school student, after seeing a university engineering school in operation and becoming familiar with its requirements, decides finally that he would not care to study engineering, he too can guide himself accordingly.

"In either case it is far better for the student concerned to find out early in his educational career what he particularly likes or dislikes rather than to have him make such a discovery at

LOOKING AHEAD

Scientists are concerned over the growth of population in this country. Figuring on the present basis of population, and taking into consideration the medical success and surgical skill now achieved, they predict that there will be more than 325,000,000 people in the United States by the year 2000. The question then will be how to feed and house this multitude, particularly if the country continues to consume its natural resources as recklessly as it has in the past.

Every year 115,000,000 tons of coal are wasted through failure to properly utilize water power. Scientists deplore an annual land wastage of $500,000,000, the expenditure of millions to purify streams man himself pollutes, the wasting of rivers of oil through carelessness and ignorance, and the slashing of forests three times as fast as they are grown.

Yet it seems safe to predict that should there be 325,000,000 people in the United States 69 years from now, ways will be found to house and feed all of them. The United States, until recently, has been in the infancy stage, and has been unable to realize the need to conserve what appeared to be inexhaustible natural resources. Conservation, as a national policy, was almost unheard of on this side of the Atlantic until two decades ago. Since then tremendous strides forward have been made, although even today the public is profligate in the use of natural wealth.

It cannot be denied that the conservation situation is bad, although the dawn of a new era is in sight. There is no cause to worry for the comfort and happiness of the American people in the next century, but there is even now regret that a conservation policy was not adopted sooner.

THE PASSION TO DOMINATE

More than 1,500 years ago St. Augustine, one of the greatest intellects of all time, wrote:

"What accusation does one bring against war? Is it that in battle men are killed who must all die some day? To utter such a reproach is becoming to cowardly men, not such as are religious. What one rightly blames in war is this: The desire to injure, an implacable spirit, the fury of reprisals, the passion to dominate."

In that paragraph, St. Augustine made very clear the difference between facing and meeting death for a worthy cause and for an unworthy one. The world honors those who meet death for their faith, or for the betterment of mankind through science or in any other way. But the world is learning not to honor men who face and meet death in war waged because of "the passion to dominate."

It is as powerful an argument against war as has ever been uttered. And the world is more and more agreeing with it.

A necessity is a luxury the neighbors have and you can't afford.

The trouble with reform cant is that it breeds so many nagging little cant.

Many a man who refused to take "No" for an answer is writing checks for alimony.

CHAPTER XV.

AFTER Bob Trent had helped his wife out of their creaking old car, he climbed back under the wheel and drove the rattle-trap piece of mechanism, sputtering and complaining, around to the west drive and parked it behind a tulip tree as if wishing to conceal its decrepitude.

Yet he needn't have bothered, Bim considered as she hurried over to Millicent, since everybody knew that the car was on a par with everything else about the Trent menage—a household burdened by the calamity of illness, getting by on hope and makeshift.

Millicent looked unusually dowdy in a three-year-old sports dress, whose white had yellowed with too much laundering, and a painfully mended sweater. Yet there was a certain gallantry about her. The fierce, unbending pride of one who takes the blows of fate standing, banners unfurled.

Admiration Due

Bim felt a thrill of admiration for the woman, born butterfly and turned grub for the sake of the man she loved. She pressed a kiss upon a cheek still smooth and childlike, in spite of huddling, and saw that Millicent had been crying. "Bim," wailed Millicent, clinging to the girl, "it—it just can't be! I've been telling myself and telling myself that it's nothing but a bad dream, a terrible nightmare. There must be a mistake. Isn't there? Oh, I'm sure it's all a mistake."

"You know, then, dear?" "Mary Frost stopped by. Bob doesn't know yet." She sent a frightened look toward the gaunt man who was trying clumsily to back the old car into place. "I'm afraid—I'm so desperately afraid."

"But why, darling? There'll be just a few questions about last night and then you can go. I'll tell Walter to make it easy as he can."

"But don't you see, Bim? The way Bob is—any little excitement—oh—"

She choked back a sob and managed a shaky smile for her husband.

Bim gave the sturdy little shoulder a pat and went with them into the house. There was nothing to be done. Millicent had told the truth; what Bob soon would learn easily might send him in another of the periods of semidelirium when the Trent finances, already strained to the breaking point, would be forced to stretch still further to provide for night and day nurses and daily medical attention.

Before the session in the library Bim managed to whisper something of this to Walter, and he shook his head regretfully.

"She insulted my wife," Bob went on.

Walter had known Bob Trent as long as he could remember. Back in the World War days the older man had been an object of hero-worship to the boy who saw him march demurely down Main Street, while hands played and flags lifted on the breeze, and people cheered the little company of soldiers Kingcliffe sent away to France.

Many who marched that day never returned. It perhaps, would have been better for Bob Trent and for the girl he married just before he sailed, Walter was thinking, if Bob had been among those who now slept the eternal sleep in a far away land.

He was very gentle as he spoke to the sick man; very gentle with the fluttering, weebegone little woman who watched him with wide, scared eyes.

"There's been a bit of a mix-up, old fellow, and we're trying to straighten it out. Nothing that concerns you or Millicent. Sorry to be a bother, but there's help for it."

Trent's face broke into a drawn smile but his eyes were glassy. "Trying to let me down easy, are you, Wally? Don't, then, I know when the police are around something's broke loose. What is it—robbery, divorce, assault, mayhem? Drive on, Wally; I can stand it."

But moments passed before Walter drove on, casting about as he was for the least startling way of imparting the news. His own face looked rather drawn and his eyes full of pity as he surveyed his old friend.

To The Point

"Someone was hurt last night, Bob; the Baroness it was. We're running down the—the trouble, you see."

"Hurt, Wally?"

"Well—"

"You mean she was killed, don't you? Murdered?"

"Easy, old man. Such things happen."

"Yes," Trent smiled again in a ghastly way but there was no change in the half-mind glitter of his eyes. The others sent out a breath of relief when they realized he was taking it so easily. "Yes, such things happen," he went on. "A disagreeable woman, the Baroness. Impossible. Upstart. She insulted my wife."

Millicent's protest caught on a sob. "Bob! Bob, darling! Why, it was nothing—nothing," she cried frantically. "You just didn't understand. A woman like her—rich and beautiful—what would she see in me?"

"You, Millicent?" He turned a wondering gaze upon the stunted, loyal little face and a strange, sweetness swept his expression.

"He thinks," Millicent explained half proudly, half pleadingly, "that everybody should feel about me just as he does. You understand, don't you?"

Well-Known Lecturer Addresses Rotarians

"World Problems" was the topic Thursday on which Captain Max

Wardall, well-known lecturer, addressed the members of the Bristol Rotary Club.

Captain Wardall, at present, is giving a series of lectures in Philadelphia and is a guest of Robert R. Logan, of Eddington.

War, disease and poverty were dwelt upon by the speaker in his talk to the Rotarians.

The speaker is internationally known and has been around the world three times and across the continent 10 times.

"I think the world is on the move," said Wardall. "We are progressing but we don't know just exactly where we are going."

Then the lecturer took up the three problems confronting the entire world today which he named as war, poverty and disease.

He said that the European countries today have more men under arms than they had in 1925. If you give men arms with which to fight they will use them, he said.

The speaker stated that one half of the total world population is afflicted with poverty and that disease is on the increase.

He gave it as his opinion that inoculation and the injection of various serums to counteract disease is not the right idea but that people should be taught how to live and care for themselves so that their bodies would be in such condition that they would naturally throw off disease.

Interdependence of nations and peoples is urgent, said Mr. Wardall. There must be a spirit of brotherliness developed in human hearts everywhere, and a greater understanding of the human laws of living, by which disease can be prevented.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS LOSE TO HATBORO SEXTET

(By Leon Schiffer)
In one of the biggest surprises of the season, the Hatboro sextet succeeded in defeating the local girls last night by the close score of 23 to 22. The tilt was staged on the victors' court.

Although the smallness of the floor may have hindered them in their playing, the local girls were undoubtedly off form. The game was really more of a donation to Hatboro than a lost match.

How Often Should a Wife Buy a New Hat? —Particularly If Husband Is "Stingy"?

Is Divorce Justified When a Man Objects to a New Hat "Every Year or So" and as for a New Dress and Shoes! . . . My! Try and Get 'Em!

By WINIFRED BLACK.

HERE'S another woman with a husband that isn't doing as good husbands should.

If you could read this woman's letter you'd be sorry for her. She really has a real grievance. Her husband makes fair wages, forty-five or fifty dollars a week on an average, and a good deal more than forty-five and fifty dollars a week a good deal of the time.

What does Winifred Black husband do with that money? Does the wife know? She hasn't the vaguest idea. She hopes he puts it into the savings bank. That's what he says he does, but does she ever see his bank's scribbles? She does not! And she doesn't know where he keeps it. She's hunted and hunted, but she can't find a trace of it. No, he doesn't drink, he doesn't even belong to a lodge. He spends all of his evenings and every single Sunday in the year with her. But cross, crotchety, disagreeable—well, you can't even imagine it. He grows and grumbles, snaps and snarls, till you would think there was a dog in the house. But that isn't the worst of it. When this woman needs a pair of decent shoes she has to beg for the money to buy them. Just as if she was some stranger in the street, and not the man's wife, at all. And he never gives her the money for the shoes until there are good-sized holes in the soles of the old ones. A new dress? Try to get the price of it out of that husband. And as for hats—one hat looks just like another, he says, what's the use of spending money for a new one every year or so—nobody cares if a good hat is a little faded or a bit out of shape. What's the difference anyway, how she looks—if she looks all right to husband. Why should she care what other people think of her? A nickel for a package of gum, ten cents for a bag of candy? Why? Husband would have some kind of a seizure if she even dared to hint at such a thing. So she's about made up her mind to leave what she calls her jailer and go out into the big world alone. But she won't be alone very long. There's another husband waiting for her. He's the one she had in the first place. He still loves her and wants her to come back. He isn't well and may have to go to Arizona for his health, and she has always heard that Arizona is sort of an interesting place and her first husband was never stingy—not when he had money. Of course, he didn't always have it—but still— And what do I think about it? Well, my dear woman, I think you seem to regard marriage as kind of a game of checkers, get to the king row if you can and if you can't keep jumping till you get some-where near it. You didn't divorce your mother because she had a temper of her own, did you? And that brother of yours who's such a spendthrift. Have you disowned him on account of that? Can't you make the best of that disagreeable, old husband of yours? Fill your mind with other things, make new friends. When husband grumbles and growls, and snarls, be so busy thinking that you don't even hear what he says. And about Arizona—I don't believe I'd trade what looks like a sure thing for something that might turn out to be a poor guess. I really wouldn't, my dear woman—I certainly would not.
